Q: Cannot set environment variables for Python I have a fresh installation of Windows 10 Pro and try to install Python 3.7.3 using these instructions. However, when it comes to the environment variable setting, I get an error on this command set: set ENV=C:\Users\x\AppData\Local\Programs\Python\Python37-32\python.exe The error is: Please enter a value. : batch script error (0x80004005) The message itself does not explain anything; how do I set the ENV environment variable? A: On Windows 10 (and presumably Windows 7/8/8.1), using set without a parameter doesn't actually set any environment variables. The set statement resets environment variables but it does not create or delete them. The system creates and deletes environment variables when they are not set or no longer in use. So you need to execute set and then add the new/updated environment variables you want, for example: set ENV=C:\Users\x\AppData\Local\Programs\Python\Python37-32\python.exe SET PATH=%PATH%;%ENV% Q: How to check if my mounted SD card is empty Is there a command like 'df -h'? Liam Walsh's experiences of solo practice as an alternative to becoming a psychiatric nurse. Liam Walsh's contributions to the application of alternative healthcare to psychiatric patients are described. Ireland has recently faced a dramatic shortage of psychiatric nurses, an undersupply in hospital and an oversupply in mental health in the community. Walsh uses the term 'solo practitioner' to describe mental health nurses working to their full potential in a solo or partnership practice with a local authority or voluntary sector agency or professional association without recourse to the larger mental health service. Walsh has had considerable success in promoting this form of work, a system that is characterised by the practitioner having responsibility for the client and a few years work experience. The evidence base for his claims of improvement in client care, in community mental health, in nursing ethics and in the satisfaction of nurses is described.
